

Perfection

What is perfection? Is it the ultimate goal? Humans seek perfection in others and in their objectives or their creations. What causes this desire to have an image of perfection? What is motivating you to seek this illusory goal?

Have you wondered, the perfection you seek is in direct proportion to your growth? What is perfect today may seem imperfect tomorrow. This we see clearly in human relationships. Look at marriage or any other endeavor.

This is also seen in religious and spiritual matters. As you grow, your values change and what you called perfect changes. For then it contradicts with the new you - the new thoughts, new beliefs.

The idea of perfection also changes on our emotional needs. When there is an emotional vacuum, then our sense of perception is different, and this will determine the way you view perfection.

What is it that drives us to think of perfection? Is it fear of losing control, adulation, recognition or any other motives? Perfection cannot be experienced in the infinite. When you think it is perfect, then it CEASES to grow or evolve. Perfection means completion at that moment.

Do not seek Perfection - instead seek Evolution in every moment. In the development of the human body can we ever say - perfect body. Yes, in that moment.

Your sleep and waking up is a death process you go through daily. Since you are reborn every day, what was perfect yesterday, is not relevant to you today. This concept may be hard to follow.

Perfection stops the growth
Perfection stops evolution
Perfection stops exploration

Perfection stunts growth. You can see countless examples of stunted growth in companies who had perfected a certain product or products and then stopped exploring to create new things. These companies eventually die out.

Seeking of perfection is coming from a deep space of fear and insecurity. If we are perfect, then we are loved more, we have more of everything.

In the front part of the brain, which rules your cognitive thoughts there is a thin membrane and this separate ignorance and wisdom.

Perfection we seek is coming from this place of ignorance. Ignorance is tied into lack of faith in the continuation of Life. Perfection means, we want to hold on.

So, seek Continuation and not perfection and in this, your Soul will rejoice.
